MILWAUKEE, Wis., Jan. 9.—The Wisconsin prints an interview with a "railway authority," in which it is stated that legal obstacles are in the way of the Great Northern-Northern Pacific-Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul deal. The Wisconsin's informant says there are laws in Minnesota and the Dakotas which forbid combinations, leases, or other traffic arrangements between and among parallel, competing lines, which the named railways are.

JAMES J. HILL IN NEW YORK.

James J. Hill, President of the Great Northern Railroad, is in this city, and his advent has given rise to many rumors, none of which he will take the trouble to either verify or deny.

The importance of Mr. Hill just now is due to the belief that he is at present engaged in an attempt to consolidate, combine, or connect in some other way the controlling interests in the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the St. Paul, the Erie, the Baltimore and Ohio, and two or three other railroads so as to create one grand transcontinental railway system. Mr. Hill has repeatedly denied that he has any such scheme on hand, but Wall Street has so far refused to believe him, and is daily expecting the announcement that some such great "deal" has been completed.

After leaving the Hotel Netherlands early yesterday morning, Mr. Hill went to his office, on Pine Street. Immediately the report was circulated that the "deal" was being settled in his office. Then he dropped into Mr. Morgan's office, and rumors became current that he would be Mr. Morgan's chief assistant in the anthracite coal combination. Mr. Hill then went over to the Chase National Bank, the President of which, H. W. Cannon, is a close friend of his. Mr. Cannon is a Director in the Ontario and Western, and the report spread that Mr. Hill's influence would be used to bring that road into harmony with the other anthracite lines. This report was strengthened when Thomas P. Fowler, President of the Ontario and Western, called to see Mr. Hill. Mr. Hill was busy and Mr. Fowler said he would call again. James Stillman, President of the City Bank; Jacob H. Schiff, and E. H. Harriman, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Union Pacific, were the next callers, and there were more rumors.

Mr. Hill finally met the reporters and told them that he had come to New York, accompanied by M. D. Grover, the road's general solicitor, and D. Miller, the Vice President, as well as by his private secretary and two or three others whom he does not generally bring with him on his frequent visits, simply to "clean up some small matters, none of them as important as the papers would have the public believe," and also to consult with shipbuilders in regard to some ships for his lake lines. It was noticed, however, that he did not see any shipbuilders yesterday. Asked about the reports of large railroad combinations, Mr. Hill said that these reports were exaggerations of a few facts. Beyond this he would say nothing except that he had been misrepresented in the public prints and he had decided that the best policy was silence concerning his own affairs, it being better for his own interests.

Mr. Hill left the Chase National Bank about 1:30 to take luncheon. Later he returned to his office and then went up town earlier than usual. He did not attend the meeting of the Northern Pacific Directors.

One of the Directors of the St. Paul Road said yesterday that one reason why no change would be made in the status of the St. Paul was because any "deal" between the Great Northern and the St. Paul could be effectively opposed by the Chicago and Northwestern and the other Chicago-St. Paul roads who interchange much traffic with the Great Northern.

NEW COAST LINE.

An important enterprise in the railroad world is the construction of the new coast line of the Southern Pacific Company between Los Angeles and San Francisco, which, it is expected, will be ready for service within a short time. The line has been under construction for many years, progress being rendered slow by the heavy tunnel work required. The passenger schedule, so far as completed, provides for a night and a day express. The night trains will carry through sleepers and baggage. The day trains will be fully vestibuled and will have a dining or grill car, which will be provided with a large kitchen suitable for preparing any kind of meals, excepting possibly roasts. A Pullman parlor car will also be attached to each train. The morning trains from San Francisco will have a connection through to Monterey.

The new route runs through the principal coast resorts of California and will bring the passenger into San Francisco without any water transfers. The last rail connection on the line was recently made near Cementeria Cañon.
